Fault or defect tolerance has become a major consideration in manufacturing integrated circuits. Some types of defects can be detected through testing of samples of an integrated circuit while the integrated circuits are being fabricated, and can be corrected at that time. However, other types of defects are only detected after an integrated circuit has been completely fabricated. Some types of defects cannot be detected or corrected by the above-described processes. These defects are generally referred to as latent defects or latent conditions. Examples of these latent defects or conditions are latch-up, sneak current, and various forms of leakage. These latent conditions may be active during the normal operation of the integrated circuit. The integrated circuits having these latent defects or conditions can be tested only in the final state when they are completely fabricated, and consequently, the defects are detected at the end of the process. There is a need for a method of testing an integrated circuit for the various conditions and operating modes of the integrated circuit in a non-destructive manner. Maryam Mirzakhani Born in Tehran, Iran, Maryam Mirzakhani became the first woman from the Middle East to win the Fields Medal, the most prestigious mathematics award in the world, at the 2014 International Congress of Mathematicians in Rio de Janeiro, Brazil. Mirzakhani, who is also a professor at Stanford University, was selected this year for her work in three-dimensional geometry, particularly in the field of hyperbolic geometry. The Fields Medal is named for the English mathematician and mathematician laureate Charles Simonyi who, in 1954, set up the prize. Its laureates, selected for exceptional achievements in mathematics, are chosen every four years and receive a medal from the International Mathematical Union and a prize of $114,000 (about $140,000 at current exchange rates).
